

ANCIENT CENTRAL ASIAN NETWORKS

Rethinking the Interplay of Religions, Art and Politics across the Tarim Basin (5th-10th c.)

The workshop will explore the dynamics of cultural transmission and communication in Eastern Central Asia during the second half of the 1st millennium CE. with an interdisciplinary approach, based on recent data acquired from archeological excavations and the analysis of visual and textual resources. "Central Asian networks" here denotes, both in their physical context (historical and geographical) and in a conceptual sense, connections established by means of religious ideas, political alliances (often sanctioned through familial relations) and economic interests.

A special focus is put on the inter-dynamics of the macro and micro level of these networks as exemplified by two major hubs, Khotan and Dunhuang, and the impact that their privileged channel of communication had in the exchanges across the Tarim basin. Throughout a large part of the 1st millennium these two centers have been closely interconnected — predominantly in being two of the most important strongholds of Buddhism in Central Asia and significant political centers. Both acted as place of encounters of people, cultural practices and religious ideas, giving rise to specific artistic and textual productions. This workshop will study several aspects of these networks, with an emphasis on the impact of politics and diplomatic strategies on the development of religious practices and artistic expressions in these areas.
